ARRIVED.—Per John Ritson, Mrs. Matches. Per N. B. Palmer, Rev. H. V. Rankin, Mrs. Rankin & 3 children, Mrs. Nevius, Mrs. Jenkins & 2 children, Miss Bissland, and Mr. Wm. Gample. Per Chusan, Messrs. Fish, S. W. Young, W. E. Norton, J. Mackhilar, J. Green, S. C. Bayley, A. Colvin Linnober, G. W. Talbot, Heyson, Olyphant, McLellan, and Hon. W. M. Jocelyn.

It has taken every one somewhat by surprise to learn that Kweiliang and Hwashana, the Commissioners who negotiated the foreign treaties, are on their way south, ostensibly to assist in revising the Tariff. We should have thought such a task would hardly have devolved upon officials of so high a position in the empire. Associated with them are Kifu, formerly Hoppo at Canton and now a vice-president of the Board of Revenue, and Mingshen, of whom as yet we have learned nothing more. They are to consult with Ho Kwei-tsing, governor-general of these provinces. The Decree, we are informed was issued on the 15th inst. and the commission is expected at Soochow about the middle of August.

GRAIN SUPPLY OF PEKING.

IT is now several months since rumours reached us of the terror produced in the districts adjoining the lower part of the Yellow River, by its disappearance from its ancient bed.* It seems beyond doubt established that, from a point which must be about as high up as Kai-fung Fu, this violent stream has forced a new, or, according to Chinese historians, has resumed an old, channel in a northeasterly direction, and now makes its way in the Gulf of Pechelee by superadding its waters to those of the Ta Tsing and other rivers of Shan Tung. Much of the intermediate country is described by a recent traveller as more lake than land, and the great artery of northern China, the Grand Canal, clogged in some places and expanded out of all symmetry in others, lies useless for any of the greater purposes of trade or supply for which it was originally intended. From the statement of the crew of a Yang-chau junk which had forced her way up to Tien-tsin early in 1857, the bed of the Yellow River had been filled with water from the canal reservoir by Hwai-ngan Fu to the depth of 3 feet, to enable vessels to cross. The junk in question drew but 2 feet. She found in many places up the canal but 4 inches water, and the greatest depth at any point did not exceed 4 feet. We have since learned that the bed of the Yellow River, if temporarily filled, as stated, at the point in question, is now at all events perfectly dry.

It is difficult to say from what depths of exigency the industry of China may not recover itself; but it is almost beyond a doubt that, for the present, the operation of one of her greatest works is in abeyance, and the north of her empire is consequently beholden for its commerce, and to a large extent for its subsistence, to the coast trade, which it has been the policy of the government, as regards the most important article of Chinese life, to restrict in favor of its inland traffic. The wants of northern China naturally attract our attention at a moment the ports of that region have been opened to a certain extent to our commerce, and the following particulars of what we are wont to describe as the Grain Tribute of China and of the past and present methods of its transmission, may not be uninteresting to our readers.

The code of the Board of Revenue of 1831, the latest edition we believe in print, shewed that exclusive of 13,340 tons for which a constant commutation-tax, amounting to 240,570 taels was levied at various rates in five of the contributing provinces, the whole Grain Tribute annually forwarded in kind, used to be collected in the following proportions:—

Rice,	210,000 tons.
White rice for the Court's use,	44,000 „
Wheat,	4,000 „
Pulse,	17,000 „

The Wheat and Pulse were grown in Chih Li itself, in Shan Tung and in Ho Nan; the Black Pulse in Manchuria The Wheat is stated to be the only sort destined for human consumption, but this is by no means certain.

The subjoined table drawn up from the same authority declares the proportions in which under ordinary circumstances the producing districts would contribute. The wretched state of the canal communications and the rebellion, which, besides interrupting both the collection and transmission of the grain-supply, has for many years absorbed the funds otherwise applicable to the repairs of the canal and river, are causes which materially affect the original conditions of this branch of revenue. We will speak of it first as it was.

The official expenditure of grain, in 1811, was some 113,000 tons without reckoning the Court's own demand, and according to the Revenue Statistics of 1831, already quoted, there should always have been in store, at Peking, 354,000 tons of rice and at Tung Chau, twelve miles off, 82,000 tons. None of this should be allowed to be unsold or unexpended longer than three years.

The shipment of the grain was effected at 44 major and 19 minor stations in the eight provinces of,—

Chih Li.	Kiang Si.
Shan Tung.	Cheh Kiang.
Kiang Su.	Hu Nan.
Ngan Hwui.	Hu Peh.

These with all details of the establishment charged with its carriage and escort are under a superintendent with the title of governor-general, whose head-quarters are at Hwai-ngan Fu. He has under him a force on a quasi-military footing, the total strength of which is about 64,000 men. The grain-junks used to leave the points of collection in fleets departing at different periods so as to avoid confusion, each vessel bearing 300 piculs on government account. The escort, known as kiting, carried a certain amount on private account, and were indeed rewarded for bringing in from 100 to 200 piculs in excess of the government cargo. Each junk was allowed a sum for her expenses ranging in amount from 100 to 200 taels.

The collection of the Grain Tribute was supposed to commence on the 1st of the 10th moon, say in November, and all grain, no matter where collected, to be weighed and shipped for the Canal two months later. The junks from the districts north of the Yang-tsz' in the neighbourhood of the Canal, by law should cross the Yellow River at Hwai-ngan Fu in the 12th moon; January or February; those from other parts of Kiang Su and Ngan Hwui, a month later, and those from Kiang Si, Cheh Kiang, Hu Peh, and Hu Nan, a month later than the last. After they are across the law still allows them three months to ascend the Canal to Tien-tsin, there to tranship their cargoes for Tung Chau, whence the chief part of them would be carried in carts to Peking.

The line of Canal communication between the Yang-tsz' and the Yellow River has but two approaches officially recognised as available for the transmission of the Grain Tribute, one the Kwa-chau mouth of the Canal opposite Chin-kiang Fu; the other at I-ching, a few miles higher up the stream. Punctuality has not been more remarkable in this than in any other branch of Chinese revenue, but the grand derangement of all calculations respecting the transmission of grain has ever been the capricious disposition of the Yellow River. The 20th term of the Chinese year, known as the "frost's descent," has always been watched with anxiety, and freedom from inundation during this period entitled the spirit of the stream to a special sacrifice in token of the Emperor's gratitude. A glance at the map will shew that from the points of its intersection by the Yellow River the Canal takes a northwesterly direction, running for a considerable distance nearly parallel to the course of its turbulent neighbour. As it quits the border of Kiang Su it becomes principally beholden for its supply to various sheets of water, part lake, part reservoir, which, unless we misunderstand the Peking Gazettes are of a construction precariously primitive. Vast earth-works are thrown up, and into the space they enclose water is worked from the adjacent streams to the very great peril, as the Gazette admits, of the mud enceinte, which would be utterly destroyed were the body within it all water. To mitigate this danger and at the same time to preserve the water-level necessary to the supply of the Canal, the vast tanks are three-fourths filled with mud.

In 1851 a more than usually virulent outbreak of the Yellow River swept away all the works of earth and masonry in the section of river-works known as the Fung-peh, in the north corner of Kiang Su. In August, 1852, the upward-bound grain fleet was obliged to land its cargo in Shan Tung some 80 miles below Tsi-ning, to a point in which department all the grain to had be carried by land for reshipment to Peking. The Emperor was shortly moved by various memorialists to consider some new means of supplying the capital with grain; the Canal, it was urged, having become impracticable by mismanagement.

Early in 1853 a censor recommends the transport of grain by sea. He puts the total consumption of the capital at 4 million piculs of superior, and 2½ million piculs of inferior descriptions of grain; say 430,000 tons. The provinces heretofore relied upon were all disturbed by rebels, but in Fuh Kien and Cheh Kiang, which were quiet, a sale of rank might be opened, and grain bought by the local government with the proceeds. The Formosa market was also spoken of. By the end of the year, 333 junks of grain from the south had reached the Gulf of Pechelee.

In the spring of 1854, the capital was in sore distress. The rebels were on the borders of Tien-tsin, and Cheh Kiang was the only one of the supplying provinces not in disorder; even there floods had done damage. The Emperor was accordingly prayed to give a general invitation to merchants to import grain from all parts. The river communication between Peking and Tien-tsin had also been injured by inundation. Still, by the close of the year the grain receipts at Tung chau amounted to 1,424,946 piculs, nearly 100,000 tons. This is described as grain of 1853. It is classed under eight different denominations, and its carriage up from Tien-tsin, it is observable, employed 3,892 river junks from the 7th June to the 3rd August.

A Decree of January, 1855, shows that the rendezvous of the junks bringing grain from Kiang Su and Cheh kiang was the port of Liu Ho, a small customs station on the Yang-tsz' at no great distance from Shanghai. The Emperor is in great want of rice and lays an embargo right and left on flat bottomed vessels along the whole coast from the Gulf of Liau Tung down to Ningpo. Cheh Kiang furnished no less than 60,000 tons this year; but this appears to be nearly all that Peking received.

In May, 1856, the governor of Cheh Kiang, in a somewhat self-complacent memorial, reports the shipment of about 60,000 tons in 791 junks, divided into 6 fleets. It is now four years, he says, since the sea-transport was commenced on the recommendation of his predecessor, and the subsidy is increasing annually. By the 5th July, 1,200 junks had discharged 100,000 tons at Tien-tsin and returned south. Some 6,000 tons were still due. The insurrection being now to all appearance about to limit itself to the southern provinces, the canal was surveyed in the hope of again making it navigable for the Grain fleet. The report is long and, from the use of certain technicalities, somewhat difficult of translation. The fact, however, is established that, owing to a series of inundations from 1851 to 1855, the artificial channels had sustained almost irreparable damage. The Wei-shan Hu, a principal reservoir, which should have in it 14 feet of water, had but from 2 to 8 feet; in many places mud banks stood out like islands, and along its whole western verge was a dry tract of varying width. A proposition to introduce more water and more deposit was rejected, as calculated to jeopardise the frail enclosure of the Hu. The year closes with disastrous notices. In Peking rice was from 9 to 10 dollars a picul; the crop short in Kiang Su and Cheh Kiang, which were also suffering from locusts. There were locusts in Chih Li as well.

In 1857 the authorities of the Two Kwang are called on to find rice for the Court. Some of the Kiang Su quota is detained for war supplies. That the abandonment of the Canal transport is in contemplation may be inferred from a proposal, made by the Board of Revenue, to dispose of the junks formerly employed upon the canal, many of which we know to be rotting at Hang-chau and elsewhere. The Board also remarks, by the way, that an equivalent to their former tax in grain is now levied in coin on Hu Peh, Hu Nan, Kiang Si, and Ngan Hwui; another indication of the court's acceptance of the sea-transport as something more than a temporary measure. The authorities of Manchuria reported the shipment, in June, of some 3,000 tons of grain, which they describe as rice. It was probably wheat.

Supposing the censor's estimate, tendered in 1853, to be approximately correct, it follows that in the last six years, the supply of the best grain has only twice equalled a third, and did not, last year, amount to a tenth, of the Peking demand. The supply of this year remains to be ascertained, but when the mission were at Tien-tsin, a month ago, rice was selling at from five to six dollars a picul, and the resources of the province were threatened by locusts which continued to arrive by myriads. These were sold dried as food, at 40 cash a catty. They did not seem in such request, nevertheless, as to cause future speculators in "grain-stuffs" any serious apprehension.

OUR harbour has during the last week or two exhibited a forest of masts unequalled at any previous period. In addition to 95 foreign merchant vessels, exclusive of lorchas, there have been upwards of twenty pendants at one time here and at Woosung. The latter are now clearing away and by next week there will only be left at this station H. M. S. Highflyer, and Gun-boats, Firm, and Opossum; the latter goes to Nagasaki with the Admiral, but will return to remain here for a time. The Niwrod relieves the Surprise at Ningpo, the latter being ordered to the Cape of Good Hope. The Fury leaves to-morrow for Hongkong, calling at Amoy. The Banterer on Monday for Foochow.

As it will probably be a fortnight before the Chinese Imperial Commissioners arrive from Peking, Lord Elgin has decided on a trip to Nagasaki, perhaps with the view of seeing what may be the chance of ulterior negociations with that country, and whether it will be worth while to repeat his visit. His lordship leaves today in the Furious, the Retribution and Gun-boat Lee in company. The Cruiser remains with instructions to go over to Nagasaki immediately it is known here that the Commissioners are near.

The Admiral also leaves to-day in the Coromandel, tender, to join the Calcutta at the Ruggeds. He then proceeds in her to Nagasaki taking with him the Inflexible and Opossum, and the Yacht to be presented to the Emperor of Japan as a present from the Queen of England. We believe it is His Excellency's intention then to proceed forthwith to Hongkong whither all the rest of the squadron are gone, and where the world will consider the presence of the naval Commander-in-Chief and all his available force is required in the midst of that most intricate and embarrassing state of affairs which prevails there. We hope His Excellency will take one of the steamers and reach the scene as speedily as possible instead of sailing down in the Calcutta against the monsoon.

WE are informed that one of the men who belonged to the boat from which Mr. Wayland mysteriously disappeared has been apprehended by the Taoutai, and is lodged in prison, where the lowda still remains incarcerated.

THE Austrian Frigate Novara anchored in this harbour on Thursday afternoon. The purpose of her voyage is entirely scientific and therefore particularly interesting.

The Novara was built at Venice about 8 years ago; she is sent out under the patronage of His Imperial Highness, the Archduke, Ferdinand Maximilian, the head of the Austrian Navy (brother of the Emperor Francis Josef I. of Austria,) on a voyage of circumnavigation, with the laudable object of giving the naval officers and midshipmen a fair opportunity to instruct themselves, by navigating foreign seas and visiting most of the principal sea-ports of the world, and with the view of increasing the Tropical Collection of objects of Natural History in Vienna. For the benefit of science generally, His Imperial Highness (himself a warm friend and promoter of scientific pursuits) has permitted a number of naturalists to join the Mission.

The command of the Expedition has been entrusted to Commodore B. de Wuellerstorf and Nebair, formerly Director of the Imperial Observatory at Venice. The frigate is comanded by Captain Baron Pöck. The staff is composed of ten officers, one Chaplain, one Secretary and three Physicians. The Scientific Commission consists of one Geologist (Dr. Hochstetter), two Zoologists, (Messrs. Frauenfeld and Zelebor,) one Botanist (Dr. Schwarz,) one Horticulturist Mr. (Tellmek) and an Ethnographer (Dr. Scherzer,) whose recent work on the free States of Central America, is so favorably spoken of by the English press.

Further particulars relating to the Novara's voyage we must postpone for our next number.

NOTICE TO MARINERS.

WE have been favored by Commander Brooker, R.N., H. M. S. Inflexible, with the following description of a safe harbour that lies on the North East Coast of Formosa, visited by that vessel on her late circuit round that island, of which an interesting account appeared in our number of the 10th inst. It is more gratifying to point to safe places of refuge than to give warning of dangers to be avoided, but to the navigitor they are alike valuable.

SOO-AU BAY.

SOO-AU bay on the East Coast of Formosa offers a good and safe anchorage for vessels of large tonnage in both monsoons, being well protected from the N. E. and S. W. winds by moderately high hills, it is exposed to the S. E. from which quarter it seldom blows, is a mile wide at the entrance and 1½ mile deep; can be entered without fear as there are no hidden dangers, water gradually shoaling to 5 fms. within two cables length of the shore. In the centre of the bay is a group of rocks all above water with 2½ and 3 fms., close to, they should not, however, be approached within 100 yards; a good anchorage lies between them and Soo-au village at the head of the bay where there is a good stream of fresh water which runs through that village, there are also two good anchorages in the small and nearly land locked bays on either side of the entrance into Soo-au—for small craft; the bluff point forming the small bay on the right hand going in should not be approached within 80 yards as a shoal runs off the point nearly to that distance; the small bay on the left hand can be entered by either passage round the centre group of Rocks; in these bays the soundings are 6 fms., 5 fms., 4 fms. and 2 fms. within 60 yards of the sandy beach; about the middle of the bay is the best place, being protected from all quarters.

Soo au bay is easily recognized by a cluster of pinnacle-shaped rocks off the northern entrance and by a remarkable looking Island called Steep Island in the chart, from which the rocks bear S. by W. 13 miles; in coming from the North vessels should not pass between these Soo-au Rocks and the North Cape or bluff point, as there is a sunken reef of rocks which appears to extend out to them,—blowing fresh they break heavily. The outer rock (which is the highest, 150 feet) of the Soo-au Rocks may be rounded close to for entering the bay; keeping a mid-channel course, no soundings with the hand lead will be obtained until well past the Soo-au Rocks. —I should recommend the anchorage between the head of the bay and the centre Group of rocks, as they form a good break-water from Easterly winds—

YEH'S PORTRAIT.

(FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

Calcutta River, March 17.

(Concluded from No. 417.)

The Confucian philosophy, therefore, recognizes only nature self-produced, active, but willless and unintelligent. The disciples of Confucius tolerate the idea of the existence of ruling spirits born of the operations of nature—the creatures, and not the creators, of the universe. In this way they are able to engraft Taouism and Bhuddism upon Confucianism.

When Yeh turns to the east and remains in contemplation he is adoring nature, and not the Spiritual creations of nature. He is contemplating nature in her best aspect.

I was anxious to learn something of the practical working of this system of philosophy.

"If a man who has learnt to talk Taoli does not do Taoli, does any punishment strive to him?—Such a man would be very bad."

"Would Shangti punish him?—The things of Heaven how can we tell?"

"Does your Excellency recollect a saying of Confucius, 'That which you would not that another would do to you that do not to him?'—It is Confucian Taoli. I forget the exact expression in the four books."

"In our Western Taoli we have a more extended Taoli, which commmands a duty as well as forbids an offence. It runs, 'Do unto others everything that you would wish others to do to you.' Is there anything equivalent to this in your four books?—Such is not said in the four books."

"Is not benevolence spoken of in the four books?—Yes."

"What is benevolence?—If you desire men to love you you must love them. If you do not wish men to hate you, you must not hate them."

"Would not the saying of Confucius before referred to forbid punishment to criminals?—The Taoli does not mean that."

"Or revenging an injury?—That would depend on the man."

"Would it not be wrong?—Yes."

"Does not this Taoli give an advantage to bad people who commit injuries?—The knowledge of Taoli is nevertheless the better."

"Why?—The object of our wishes is to come to a knowledge of Taoli."

"Are murder, robbery, and adultery forbidden in the four books?—Not directly, but it results from the Taoli."

"If these doctrines are influential in China, how does it become necessary to punish so many?—The good are in the majority. It is impossible for all to be good."

"You have spoken of benevolence as a part of Taoli; is the benevolence you speak of merely a condition of the mind, or is it a course of action dictated from within?—Benevolence is Taoli—Taoli is benevolence."

He was evidently getting tired of a lecture which had interested him at its commencement. It was necessary to drop the subject. We had many subsequent talks with him on the same matters, but he had evidently reconsidered the matter, and had made up his mind to give us no further information.

On a day subsequent to our last conversation we referred to a previous conversation which had been interrupted, and said,—

"Your Excellency said the other day that it was not by your will that the English were excluded from Canton city.—It was the will of the Emperor and the people.

"Who are the people?—The 100 surnames.

"Not only the gentry?—The feeling was not only that of the inhabitants of the city, but of the villages all round about.

"What was that feeling based upon?—That you must ask the people, you must not ask me.

"There is no demonstration of such a feeling now?—I know nothing about that.

"When Captain Pym, the captain of the police, goes about the city the people come to him and say, 'We are glad to see you here, you preserve our property?'"—No answer.

"Does your Excellency understand the two systems of collecting duties as in exercise at Canton and Shanghai, and would you think fit to give an opinion upon them?—I do not know."

He returned of his own accord to the Canton topic.

"It was not my city; how could I let you in?

"But the treaty was express!—I do not remember."

I only cite this conversation to note that, although Yeh is willing, and indeed anxious, to have it reported that he adheres to the transparent fables he put forth in his State papers, yet he will enter into no discussion upon them

He afterwards added of his own accord:—

"I did make preparations. A man would have no sense who did not. It was not that my preparations were insufficient, nor that my soldiers were cowardly, nor that the officers were inefficient, but only because your guns are so tremendous (li-hai)."

One night Captain Brooker beat to night quarters, and we went down to forewarn Yeh, lest he should suffer by being startled from sleep by the sound of heavy guns. He and his servant were already up and inquiring. They had heard the sudden bustle upon deck. Having been told that the men were going to exercise with the great guns, he quietly turned in again. He actually affected to be fast asleep while the 68 lbs. pivot gun was blazing away just over his head, and the broadsides were shaking the ship from stem to stern. He had the impudence to declare next morning that he had slept quite through the firing.

One day, after he had been sitting fanning himself for seven hours without saying a word, or even smoking a pipe, I asked him whether it did not disconcert him to see every one else around prop themselves out of the steam-ports, hoping that he has cozened his captors into the belief that he has no sentiment but that of sublime indifference both to them and to their creations.

So soon as the Inflexible dropped her anchor Major Herbert, to whose care Yeh had been assigned, came on board with a retinue of real-colored Hindoos,—a glare of scarlet which much impressed the vulgar Chinamen. The old Mandarin, however, was not to be caught. He received the Major in his greasy coat, went on with his dinner, replied to his many bows with a carefully modulated courtesy, and decided that it would take three days to make his preparations for disembarking.

This morning at daybreak Yeh landed. He is located for the present in Fort William, but a convenient house is being furnished for him some little way out of the city. Before he went he presented Captain Brooker with a written certificate of his presence and good treatment on board the Inflexible. This was done in a grave official manner, and Yeh, no doubt, thinks it a most value able document. He is now in the best place in the whole world to teach a Mandarin a useful lesson. The Calcutta people seem to have a very general contempt for most things, but a special contempt for China. The indifference which Yeh laboriously feigns they honestly feel. Yeh would be a lion in London; he will not attract more notice than a five-legged poodle in Calcutta.

Perhaps you may allow me hereafter to say something in the way of generalizing the facts here collected, but here ends this episode to the Chinese expedition—an expedition which, whatever may be its direct claims to interest, has, by its incidental operations, relieved Lucknow and saved India.

EXPERIENCES OF A NEW-COMER.

No. 1.

Scene—Verandah in Shanghai, changed to a Bed-room in ditto.

I leant upon the balustrade, and mused
Upon the fate inscrutable, that brought
My modest self to China's distant shore,
And from a simple clerk in London town
Produced a—prudence bids me not say what—
Waits many heavy cases, Hindi tongues!
The moon in silvery glory reigned supreme,
Making night still more beautiful than day;
All nature slept, and, save the distant bells
That from a ship proclaimed the midnight hour,
No sound was heard, sufficient to awake
The slumbering Indian on his bed of rice.
A scene so calm, delicious, and so still,
Must ever soothe the rugged breast of man,
And purify his heart! I lingered on,
Yet loth to lose th' enjoyment of a breeze
That waved my cheek, and fanned my heated brow!
Too soon, alas! I came to myself away,
And sought oblivion in my curtained couch.
As well the wretched criminal might strive
To fly the doom by Justice once pronounced,
As I to escape those insect cannibals,
Which come to plague us from Mosquito's shore!
Relentless murderers of sleep, true Skylocks they,
Exacting to the last their pound of flesh;
Nature exhausted must ere long succumb—
My eyelids drooped, and soon were closed in sleep.
* * * * * * * * * * * *
I might have dozed, perhaps, an hour or two,
O'er many, many, trembling with affright,
My throbbing temples bathed in clammy dew.
A dull, mysterious sound, so strange and clear,
That found it's echoes in my beating heart,
Smote like the fateful death-watch on my ear.
Tap-tap-tap-tap—at measured intervals,
So hollow and monotonous, it seemed
To chill my blood and pierce the very brain.
Nearer it came, beneath my window paused,
And now upon the midnight air arose
A wailing melancholy moan, as if
A lost spirit, groaning, strove for freedom!
My senses reeled, and, leaping from the bed,
Breathless with fear, my starting eyeballs peered
Into the gloom, expecting to behold
That grisly shape, whose presence we most dread!
A dark and awful figure stood below,
Enfolded in a sombre drapery,
Of form and colour vague and undefined.
His right arm wielded what to me appeared
A sword, which ever and anon he smote
Upon a hollow sphere of wood, that rang
At every blow with horrid dissonance.
I strove to speak, but, ere the tongue could wag,
A groan again resounded to the sky,
Assuming soon a more familiar tone
Which solved the mystery.

A watch dog's bark
Proved the perturbed spirit to be Pouto;
While, the bright moon, emerging from a cloud,
Revealed at once the wondrous shape below,
A careful guardian of our property,
Who regularly paced his nightly round,
And beat a gong to scare the thieves away!

J.

"What does cleave mean, papa?"—"It means to stick together."—"Does John stick wood together when he cleaves it?"—"Hem! it means to separate."—"Well, then, pa, does a man separate from his wife when he cleaves to her?"—"Don't ask foolish questions, child."

A young lady happening to hear that Mr. Disraeli had imposed a penny stamp upon checks, expressed a wish to know whether he was also likely to put a duty on merinos.

MULTIPLICITY.—A farmer who was plagued and bantered by above a dozen chaffing fellows, said at last, "Ah! well, I've got the best of you."—"How so?" asked all.—"In me you have only got one fool," he replied, "while in you I've got above a dozen."

A late return shows that 109,660 persons are employed on the railways in the United Kingdom, exclusive of the lines not yet finished.
